

People's hero

Taking time off from battlefield duties, Giap (center) lauds "Heroes of Socialist Labor" during Hanoi's May Day celebrations in 1968.

After the war

Although the US were expelled from Indochina in 1975, the threat to Vietnamese sovereignty was not over. Hanoi found itself facing threats from former Communist allies—the Cambodian Khmer Rouge and the Chinese—but Giap's army quickly overcame them.

Although Giap retired from the military in the early 1980s, he persevered in politics for another decade, during which he wrote and gave many interviews about military strategy. In 2013, the general died—aged 102—after four years in an army hospital.

“Any forces that ... impose their will on other nations will ... face defeat.”

GENERAL GIAP, IN AN INTERVIEW WITH BBC NEWS, 2004