

Women speak out

Members of the “Women’s Strike for Peace” activist group—one of the first groups to oppose the war—push their way to the doors of the Pentagon building to demand a meeting. A 30-minute lockdown ensued instead.

Challengers step up

It was shaping up to be a hotly contested election year. Senator Eugene McCarthy, an antiwar senator from Minnesota, had already announced his intention to challenge Johnson for the Democratic nomination when the Tet Offensive in January 1968 threw the entire campaign into chaos. When McCarthy nearly bested Johnson in the New Hampshire primary in early March, others jumped into the fray. Robert Kennedy, brother of John F. Kennedy, declared his candidacy on March 16. Alabama’s segregationist governor George
