

American Strategy in 1972

When US intelligence reported a surge in North Vietnamese military activity, American leaders and commanders pondered the prospect of an attack—when would it come, where would it fall, and would the South Vietnamese be able to cope?