Vietnamese People's Air Force Museum, Ho Chi Minh City

Adjacent to the site of Tan Son Nhut Air Base—a major US airbase during the war—the Vietnamese People's Air Force museum contains a collection of aircraft and objects associated with North Vietnam's Vietnam People's Airforce (VPAF). It also includes an outdoor exhibit featuring US and ARVN planes.

War Remnants Museum

Pulling no punches, this attraction is one of the most popular stops for war tourists in Vietnam. The exhibits include weapons, vehicles, and artifacts from both US and Vietnamese veterans, as well as harrowing photographs and accounts of the conflict. It also contains replicas of the notorious "tiger cages," in which communist prisoners were confined on Con Son Island.

Xa Loi Pagoda

A key site of resistance to President Ngo Dinh Diem, the pagoda has a shrine honoring the martyrdom of Buddhist monk Thich Quang Duc, whose self-immolation nearby captured the eyes of the world in 1963.

KONTUM

Skull Slope

Kontum was the site of a major battle between the NVA and ARVN forces during the Easter Offensive of 1972. A memorial on Hill 601 (Diem Cao 601) remembers those who fell. Locally called Skull Slope or Skull Hill, it occupies ground where the remains of 700 NVA and Viet Cong soldiers were unearthed after the war.

Dak To

A monument on a roundabout in the town of Dak To celebrates the liberation of the Dak To-Can Tanh base by North Vietnamese forces in the 1972 Easter Offensive. At the monument are two Russian-made tanks that took part in the offensive and placards paying tribute to the NVA soldiers who died there.

NGHE AN

Kim Lien Museum

This free museum was the childhood home of Ho Chi Minh, who lived here between 1890 and 1895. At the age of six, he moved to nearby Lang Sen, where visitors can see a replica of the home he lived in there, and visit a local shrine to the beloved leader.

QUANG NGAI

Son My Vestige Site

In March 1968, American soldiers massacred innocent civilians at a hamlet known as My Lai, leading to the court martial of the American officers. The peaceful site is now marked with statues and memorial walls paying tribute to the dead, but the scars of the massacre remain visible in bullet holes and the foundations of burned down houses—each with a plaque in Vietnamese and English commemorating the fallen.
