

A mammal, not a fish

All of the animals on these pages are able to glide through the water, but they are not fish. They are warm-blooded mammals, just like us. They have lungs, not gills, and must come to the surface to breathe air.

Breathe in

Whales and dolphins draw air into their lungs through a blowhole, not through their mouths. The blowhole is positioned on top of their heads.