

Muzzle brake expels propellant gases to stabilize the main gun

Ball mount offers both protection and range of fire

Spare track links can also act as extra armor

THREE-QUARTER VIEW

Interleaved road wheels help to distribute weight

Propaganda machine

The Tiger was heavily used for German propaganda during the war. Here the Berliner Illustrierte Zeitung, a popular wartime illustrated magazine, features the tank on its cover.

Tactical number

The number "131" indicates that this tank belonged to the 1st Company, 3rd Platoon of its tank regiment, and that it was the 1st tank of its platoon.

One of a kind

This tank, Tiger 131, was captured in Tunisia in April 1943. As the first complete Tiger captured, it was taken to Britain for extensive analysis. An early example, it had the original HL210P45 engine rather than the more common HL230P30 700 hp. The tank has been restored to running order.