

Longing for peace

US artillerymen take a break at the Laotian border in 1971. The proliferation of peace signs among US troops—who painted them on tanks and pinned them to helmets—showed their diminishing support for the war.