

SKOAR!

COLLEGE

CONFESSIONS

THE SIDE OF GAMING NOBODY TALKS ABOUT

College life is chaos. Assignments, attendance, internships, placements, expectations, deadlines and somewhere in between all of that, gaming quietly becomes more than “just a hobby.” For some, it’s an escape. For some, it’s friendship. For others, it’s stress relief, memories, love stories, or sometimes... the reason they got yelled at by parents at 2 AM.

At Skoar! We recently asked our gaming community to anonymously share their deepest, funniest and most relatable gaming confessions. We promised them one thing no judgment. Just honesty.

And honestly? The responses were hilarious, emotional, and surprisingly real.

We received over 100 confessions from students across colleges, hostels, gaming cafés, Discord servers and late night ranked sessions. While we couldn’t print them all, here are some of the confessions that perfectly capture what college gaming culture actually feels like.

CONFESSION 1

“DISCORD IS A STUDY PLATFORM.”

One gamer confessed that his parents were extremely strict about gaming. One night, his mother overheard him telling his friend he’d join Discord late at night. Panic mode activated.

To save himself, he lied and told her Discord was a “study platform.” Apparently the interface looked educational enough for the lie to work — and according to him, his mom still believes it to this day.

Unlike most confessions, this gamer was brave enough to own it publicly.

— ABHINAV KUMAR,
Chandigarh University

CONFESSION 2

A DINNER THAT COSTED ₹50,000

Another player revealed that his team once lost the finals of a major inter-college tournament because his mother loudly called him downstairs for dinner mid-match. Instead of admitting the truth, he told his teammates the electricity had gone out.

To this day, the team apparently still believes there was a power cut, no matter what anyone else says.

Somewhere out there, a mother unknowingly ended a ₹50,000 tournament run. Just let that sink in for a second. Agonising, isn’t it?

CONFESSION 3

“PLANT THE SPIKE!” DURING ATTENDANCE

One confession instantly transported everyone back to lockdown days.

A student admitted he used to pretend his camera wasn’t working during online classes while secretly grinding ranked matches. Everything was going smoothly... until the day he forgot to mute his microphone.

In the middle of attendance, his professor suddenly heard:

“PLANT THE SPIKE!”

We don’t know what happened after that, but we do know one thing: Valorant audio discipline is important.