

#3 Engineering days sparked a lifelong reading journey with Digit

I had read Digit for the first time around 2010 when I was doing engineering. Actually, my uncle was reading all these Digit magazines regularly, hence I took one from him and read that and it looked so interesting that I began regularly reading it from that time onwards. The rest, as they say, is history.

Softwares which we got on the bundled CDs – then DVDs – was mesmerising at that time. Even as time moved on, Digit still stands tall. Congrats to everyone!

#6 Reliving childhood memories of father bringing home new tech

I used to read it in my childhood. My late father, a doctor by profession and a tech enthusiast at heart, would bring it home every month. This was sometime in the early 2000s around 2005, I think when computers were still new and exciting for most people (that was also a reason my father was keen to know about the latest technologies in the world) I was in school back then. Through it, I got to know about the latest mobile phones, computers, Walkmans, iPods, headphones, and all kinds of new gadgets.

Honestly, as a kid, I wasn't too interested in reading the articles. I was more drawn to the games section and the CD that came with it. The thing I loved the most was that CD/DVD it had game demos, trailers, software, and all sorts of interactive tech. Back then, it felt like a whole different world. In 2026, I subscribed to the magazine after I guess 19-20 years, all because just one day it struck my mind that I used to have Digit magazine in my childhood let's re-live the memories.

In 2011, during my school days, I first picked up the Digit magazine in a nearby newspaper shop. The technology information was mind blowing to my unsuspecting eyes, and it interested me in buying digit magazine regularly ever since!

#5 Pure excitement of my first ever tech magazine

My favourite memory was when I first got the magazine. This was my first magazine and I was very excited. Then proceeded to read every page of both the books and recommended it to a bunch of friends and family. Been a Digit fan ever since!

#7 Navigating tech and inspiring careers

Since the last 25 year, except one or two years, I have been a regular subscriber of The Digit - my (our family) technology navigator. Due to my constant reading habit my brother chose his career in IT. Nowadays he is working as a senior software engineer in a multinational company. We were very passionate about

The Digit. I have a collection of Digit CDs/DVDs in albums kept till now. We are spectators of the changes that Digit magazine made in itself and our lives. Thank you for such a great journey. The role you played is uncountable in making India a developing country. This is a moment of success and happiness. Congratulations to team Digit.
