

What do Indian TV buyers want?

Mostly bigger QLED screens, better picture quality, less price

Madhav Banka | editor@digit.in

Digit Research surveyed over 15,000 readers across India in May 2026, trying to understand what matters to Indian consumers on all things TV – everything from thoughts on their current TVs to what influences their upgrade.

Our findings indicate that Indian consumers want bigger screens, that 4K is now the bare minimum, and QLED has emerged as the most preferred display technology. Nearly one in three TV owners plan to move to a larger display, but pricing remains the single biggest barrier holding most buyers back. Here's what's going on in the minds of Indian TV buyers.

Everyone in India wants a bigger TV screen

When asked whether they were happy with the current screen size of their TV, nearly 69 percent of respondents said they were satisfied with their existing TV. However, here's where things get interesting, as more people want larger displays. Around 16 percent said they want to upgrade to a bigger TV right now, while another 16 percent said they are happy with their current TV but would eventually move to a larger screen in the future.

This suggests that around one in three TV owners want to see bigger TVs in their future upgrade plans.

Pricing is the biggest barrier to TV upgrade

While larger TVs are clearly the more desirable option, what's stopping most people from getting them now remains affordability. Among respondents who are not upgrading right now, 54 percent said that pricing is the primary reason when looking for a new TV. Another 34 percent said their current television is still performing well enough, which is why they wouldn't want to upgrade to a bigger TV set yet.

When talking about bigger TVs, space constraints are also a big factor, as traditionally Indian apartments and houses are smaller, accounting for less space. But you'd be surprised to know that only about 12 percent of respondents suggest that space is a problem. The bigger problem is still budget constraints for most households.

The need for a larger TV

Everyone wants a larger TV than their current one, and budget is still the issue, but what kind of benefit would I even get out of a bigger TV? Well, the survey suggests that Indian consumers are increasingly associating larger screens with a superior entertainment experience.

More than half of the respondents in this question said a larger screen size always improves TV viewing. Another 28 percent said the benefit depends on room size, indicating that buyers are becoming more conscious of matching screen size with their living spaces. Only a small number of people felt that picture quality mattered more than screen size. An even smaller number of people actually preferred smaller television sets.

OTT streaming: Driving force behind bigger TV screen

Again, this also aligns with our last point, where more than half of respondents said they would choose a larger TV primarily for a better movie and streaming experience. Surprisingly, family viewing was the second-largest reason, where nearly 25 percent of people suggested they would want a bigger screen to have better shared entertainment.

Gaming accounted for 13 percent of responses, showing that while gaming is still just a growing use case, OTT streaming has continued to remain the dominant driver of TV upgrades in India.