

Chases, clouds and one river detour

June did not arrive neatly. It came in with airport lanyards, mountain fog, last-ball nerves, campus chaos, river views, old fears, new confidence, and one tree that failed its landing test. If May was about belonging, June was about staying in the game – whether the game was cricket, Computex, content or college crowds. Some months behave like schedules. This one behaved like a group chat after midnight.

For Narender Sharma, June brought another reminder that pressure has a strange way of finding the calmest person. When the team needed composure in a tight chase, he stayed unbeaten till the end, scoring a crucial 15 off 11 balls and helping guide the side to a thrilling last-ball victory.

Madhav's month came with a quieter milestone. Six months at Digit. It still feels like yesterday: 24th December, Secret Santa, a 19-year-old college kid walking into the corporate world, amazed by the buildings and secretly terrified by everything else. Half a year later, the fear has softened into gratitude – for colleagues like Ishita, seniors like Priyanka, Siddharth, Vasana and Ashish, and Jayesh, who will still not be called sir, because apparently new year resolutions matter. These six months taught him plenty.

SKOAR! and Digit's power combined to pull off a successful event

Divyanshi discovered that Computex does not gently introduce itself. Covering her first one, she managed 16 videos in a day, becoming a one-woman production crew with a mic, camera, script, and survival instinct. The lanyard broke mid-shoot. The work did not.

Vyom went to Korea for transparent OLEDs, washing machines, an Innovation Gallery and a factory in Changwon.

He came back thinking mostly about the Han River. Somewhere inside the packed schedule, night opened up into ramen, an incredible view, and a camera roll still waiting to be sorted.

June also belonged to the Digit and SKOAR! team, who took Xiaomi Zoom Into Reality to Galgotias University on 2nd June. Seven hundred-plus students, smartphone photography, chaos, noise, energy – and somehow, a successful event neatly tucked under the belt.

Then came Kalpa. A 17-hour drive from Noida, followed by rain, clouds and haze that repeatedly tried to ruin the shoot. Team Digit kept going anyway, through food hunts, furry friends, drone flights, mountain adventures, and finally, one victorious sunrise.

Ashish returned to office after a month recovering at home, following the bizarre incident where a tree decided his car was a landing zone. Thankfully, he is doing well and back with us.

That was June. Not smooth. Not predictable. But still very Digit. 📺
