

While talking about tenets of the Dow theory, it is equally important to talk about how to identify trends in a particular security.

When the price plummets below the previous low and creates a lower low, it is considered a downtrend.

According to Dow theory, when the price advances above the previous high of a stock and creates a higher high, it is considered an uptrend.