

Similarly, when the stock is near the support, we can look for the price to turn bullish and take a long trade.

The probability of profits increases when the trades are taken on small corrections in the primary trend. For example, if the primary trend is downtrend, look for a correction in the price to hover near the resistance area. Similarly, when the price is in uptrend, look for a pullback at the support area.

