

Your portable fun factory

TV, music, podcasts, and more for free, endless fun

Sometimes, the best entertainment is the kind you don't have to pay for. You don't need streaming subscriptions, premium accounts, or hidden "trial" traps to watch, read, or listen to great content anymore. Across movies, anime, books, podcasts, and even live radio, a wave of ad-supported, open-access, and community-powered apps is redefining what free entertainment looks like on mobile.

Whether you're in the mood to watch a 1980s thriller, discover a new podcast, revisit forgotten Bollywood classics, or listen to Parisian jazz at midnight, this chapter turns your smartphone into a pocket-sized multiplex, library, and jukebox – all rolled into one.

1. Pluto TV

Platforms: Android, iOS

Free live TV and movies – no account, no credit card, no nonsense. Pluto TV is a streaming service that feels like an old-school TV experience but with modern flexibility. It offers hundreds of live channels streaming everything from sitcoms, sports, and anime to niche favorites like vintage game shows and true crime marathons. It even includes 24/7 channels dedicated to cult hits like Star Trek or Crystal Maze.

Unlike most streaming platforms, Pluto TV requires no sign-up. You simply open the app and start watching – flipping
