

2. FitOn

Platforms: Android, iOS

A full gym experience – minus the gym fees. Forget costly personal trainers or premium fitness subscriptions. FitOn delivers thousands of free video workouts taught by real celebrity trainers – including sessions with Gabrielle Union, Julianne Hough, and Cassey Ho. From yoga and HIIT to Pilates and bodyweight workouts, there's something for every fitness level.

The app tailors a plan based on your goals (weight loss, toning, flexibility, etc.), and you can track progress or invite friends to join challenges. It also syncs with wearables like Google Fit and Apple Health for real-time metrics.

Best of all, there are no time-limited “trials” – FitOn's core experience is completely free, with only optional extras for those who want meal plans or device integration.

Cool feature: FitOn's live group classes let you work out in real time with others – adding a social boost and accountability factor that makes solo fitness more fun.

3. Plant Nanny

Platforms: Android, iOS

Stay hydrated – and keep an adorable plant alive while doing it. Water tracking apps are nothing new, but few are as delightfully effective as Plant Nanny. Every time you log a glass of water, your cute virtual plant gets a drink too. Keep forgetting? Your little leafy companion will start to wilt until you “hydrate” it – and yourself.

The app turns hydration into a nurturing routine, with charming visuals and gentle notifications that remind you to drink throughout the day. You can unlock new plants, pots, and backgrounds as rewards for consistency, making self-care feel more like a casual mobile game than a health chore.

Plant Nanny adjusts your hydration goals based on your body data and activity level – ensuring your plant (and you) both thrive at the right pace.

4. Wysa

Platforms: Android, iOS

A caring AI companion for your mental health. Mental health help can be expensive, intimidating, or just hard to access – and that's where Wysa, a friendly AI chatbot, steps in. Developed with input from therapists and psychologists, Wysa provides text-based emotional support using evidence-based techniques like Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) and mindfulness.

You can talk to Wysa anytime, anonymously, about anything – from daily stress and anxiety to motivation slumps. The AI responds empathetically, guiding you through exercises or helping you journal your thoughts.

It's not meant to replace therapy, but it's a remarkable first step for self-care, especially if you're hesitant to talk to a human therapist.

Wysa's “Coach Mode” unlocks structured programs – like “Build Confidence” or “Handle Anxiety” – which adapt based on your emotional inputs over time.

5. MyNoise

Platforms: Android, iOS

The world's most customizable ambient noise machine – ideal for focus, sleep, or relaxation.

If you've ever searched “rain sounds” or “coffee shop ambience” on YouTube to concentrate, MyNoise is the next level. It features hundreds of handcrafted soundscapes, from soothing nature environments to sci-fi atmospheres, meditation drones, and even roleplay sounds like “Dungeon” or “Temple Bell.”

You can adjust the frequency balance of each sound layer, meaning you can literally fine-tune your noise environment to block distractions or create your perfect audio cocoon.

It works offline, doesn't nag you with ads, and doesn't collect your data – just peaceful soundscapes when you need to disconnect.

The app's built-in calibration tool adapts the sounds to your specific hearing profile and headphones, ensuring the mix is balanced for your ears alone.

6. StepSetGo

Platforms: Android, iOS

A fitness tracker that rewards your daily steps – literally. Gamification meets wellness in StepSetGo, a hugely popular Indian-made app that pays you (in rewards) to stay active. For every 1,000 steps, you earn SSG Coins, which can be redeemed for discounts, vouchers, or merchandise from partner brands.

Beyond the incentives, it's a solid step tracker – clean UI, precise counting, and friendly competition via community challenges. The app's home screen features your daily goal and motivational streaks, while the marketplace keeps you coming back for more (and walking further).

StepSetGo's Arena Mode lets you compete with friends and other users in daily or weekly step challenges, turning your fitness routine into a friendly sport.