

Find your niche and ideal listener

Build a focused show for the right audience

A podcast can be about almost anything. That is precisely the problem. “Technology”, “business”, “movies”, “fitness” or “cricket” may sound like good podcast ideas, but they are too broad to tell listeners why your show deserves their time. The first serious job of a podcaster is therefore not choosing a microphone or designing cover art. It is finding a clear niche and understanding exactly who the show is for.

A niche simply needs to be specific enough to create a recognisable promise. Instead of “a podcast about personal finance”, consider “money basics for Indian professionals in their twenties”. Instead of “a gaming podcast”, think “weekly analysis of PC gaming hardware and major releases in India”. The narrower description immediately gives you direction on guests, episode ideas, language, tone and promotion.

Start with what you can sustain

The best niche sits at the intersection of three things: what you know, what you enjoy, and what an audience wants. Take a sheet of paper and make three columns.

- Step 1: List subjects you understand well. These may come from your profession, education, hobbies or lived experience.