

Choose your format and design your podcast

Shape a format listeners can recognise and return to

Once you know what your podcast is about and who it is for, the next decision is how the show should actually work. Two podcasts can cover exactly the same subject and still feel completely different because of format. One might be a tightly scripted 15-minute explainer. Another could be a relaxed 90-minute interview. A third may combine narration, clips, music and reporting into a documentary-style episode.

Format is the operating system of your podcast. It determines how much preparation you need, what equipment is practical, how often you can publish, what kind of guests you require, and how much editing each episode demands. Choosing the right format early saves enormous frustration later.