

“ Music should never be painful to the ear but should flatter and charm it. ”

MOZART, LETTER TO HIS FATHER, SEPTEMBER 26,
1781

Wolfgang had been accorded the post of concert master at the Salzburg prince-archbishop's court at age 13 and his stipend—together with that of his father—enabled the family to move into better accommodations. They became celebrities in the town in which many of Mozart's new compositions were performed. However, the accession of a new prince-archbishop, who was less well disposed toward music, made their position at court more precarious.

“ [His works] are clear, transparent, and joyful as a spring ... ”
