

a head injury in a car accident, which triggered a brain condition. He began to experience symptoms of aphasia, the inability to process language. Soon, he was no longer able to play the piano, or to compose. In 1937, the condition worsened and became increasingly painful—he was then advised by a Parisian neurosurgeon to have an operation. This was initially thought to be successful, but very soon after Ravel fell unconscious and died, aged 62.
