

LAJOS KOSSUTH

The man to whom Bartók dedicated his tone poem Kossuth advocated for Hungarian independence from Hapsburg rule and became regent-president of the short-lived Hungarian Republic in 1849.

Influences in Budapest

The move to the Hungarian capital brought the young Bartók into contact with people who would profoundly shape his future: he met Zoltán Kodály, a composer and philosopher who became his great friend; and he was taught by János Koessler, a friend of Brahms, and by piano virtuoso István Thoman. After he
