

“ I cannot conceive of music that expresses absolutely nothing. ”

BELA BARTOK

STRING QUARTETS, C. 1915

Field research into Hungarian folk songs infused Bartók's string quartets. Here Bartók and Kodály (seated, reading) pose for a photograph with members of the Waldbauer-Kerpely String Quartet.

Love and further travel

In 1907, Bartók became infatuated with the young violinist Stefi Geyer, who inspired his Violin Concerto No. 1. Some of its themes represent Bartók's idealized image of Geyer, though she rejected his advances.
