

WITOLD LUTOSLAWSKI, 1992

Lutosławski recalled that, as a boy, music “always fascinated me, and I couldn’t imagine any other profession than musician, and even composer.” Despite his tremendous creative talent, the repressive political situation in Poland for much of his lifetime meant that he remained virtually unknown outside his country of birth until he was more than 50 years old. The composer is pictured here in his garden two years before his death.
