

GROWING FOOD

The fruits, vegetables, beans, and cereals that fill our plates all need healthy soil to grow. Farmers take great care of the soil used for their crops.

Slugs and other pests eat crops and earthworms.

In healthy soil, there are creatures such as beetles to eat pests such as slugs.

Sowing seeds

Seeds are planted at an exact depth. Too shallow, and birds will gobble them up. Too deep, and the seedlings won't grow!

Health check

Good soil feels crumbly and has plenty of earthworms. Farmers dig holes to check their soil is healthy for growing crops.

Scarecrows can frighten off birds that have their greedy eyes on the seeds.

Maize can be ground into flour and used to make flatbreads called tortillas.

China produces the most wheat in the world.
