

GETTING STARTED

Currency is a very important instrument in the lives of all those who have an earning member in other countries and they earn or spend in a different currency. All these families are significantly impacted by currency fluctuations.

A common mistake is to see the currency as an asset class rather than an instrument. Currency is not an asset class, it is an instrument. Remember, cash is an asset, and all different currencies are just a form of cash. If you hold Indian National Rupee or US Dollar, they are all types of cash. So, it is unfair to see INR and USD as two different assets.
