

A decorative horizontal band at the top of the slide, consisting of numerous parallel diagonal stripes in a lighter shade of green against the dark green background.

We have sufficient arsenal.

We have looked at the historical data, assessed it based on our knowledge of the business, and then made our future assumptions. We have made the forecast.

By discounting the future cash flows, we arrived at the present value, or to be more specific, 'How much that value should be worth right now.'

Additionally, and perhaps most critically, we added up the discounted perpetual value to arrive at the share price. Hence, we can refer to this share price and compare it with the market price to take our investment decisions.