

Decline

- As the prices start to decline, the excitement starts to fade.
- As excitement fades, there is widespread fear amongst stockholders and they start selling the stocks due to panic.
- By the time this ends, the market enters a bearish phase.

Again, decline phase is followed by an accumulation phase. This is how a stock market cycle typically moves between different stages.