These are all examples of volume increases. We see that in the first instance, if we were long the asset which is very likely, we would have instantly squared off the position. Second time around, we would have continued to hold our short position. Third time around, we see that we will not take any trade based solely on volume jump. We will hold if we were Long on the asset. Also, we will check if there was any news around this date that affected the company directly.
