

Source - Trading View

This is what a typical cup and holder pattern looks like. We see the first curve is the cup and the second curve is the holder. There is resistance when the first time the curve reverted to form the holder. If the asset can go beyond this point, we can say that there was a breakout. In this example, there was a breakout and we could have gone long.