

LIVING RELATIVE

This peacock butterfly has eyespots like those of Lethe. Eyespots defend butterflies from predators such as birds, which peck at eyes in order to strike the head. Eyespots cause birds to peck the wings and miss the head, allowing the insect to escape with only a torn wing.

