

1828

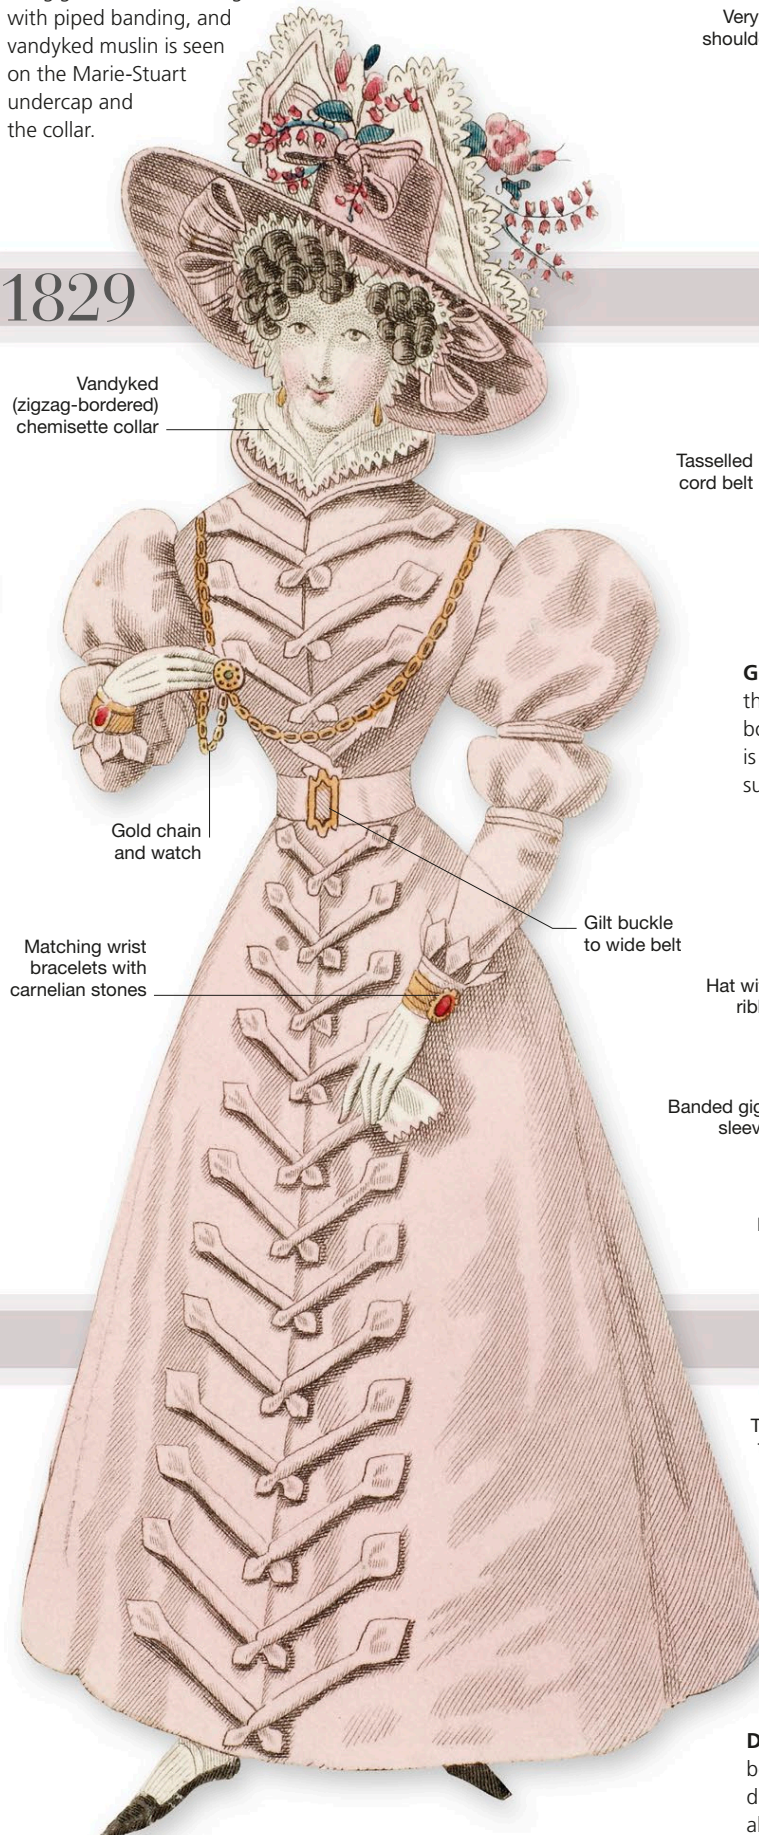

Dual purpose This striped dress could be worn in the daytime with a bonnet, and then dressed up with a headdress, as here, for dinner. The skirt is cartridge pleated into the waist.

Vine embroidery This redingote with wide collar is decorated with meandering vine and grape embroidery, and ruching. A scarf square is tied tightly around the neck, and lily-like trumpet flowers sing out from the hat.

Redingote This walking dress for summer is a pretty picture of late Georgian delights. The crosshatch fastening resembles feather quills, the gigot sleeves are caught in with piped banding, and vandyked muslin is seen on the Marie-Stuart undercap and the collar.

1829

Gothic style A Gothic-style, dark bodice tops this bell-shaped, white skirt. The back-fastened bodice is probably boned. Although the bodice is cut low and jewellery is worn, the hat suggests afternoon rather than evening wear.

Dinner dress This vandyked (zigzag-bordered) bodice forms a wide "V" to the tiny waist. The dress has asymmetrical, pinked trumpet fanning along a piped line on the skirt. Its short length reveals high-laced indoor shoes.