

Special occasion The lavender patterned waistcoat, and blue-grey trousers and bow tie, complete with frock coat, suggest a wedding suit. The outer side seam of the trousers has fashionable braid.

Lounge jacket The lounge jacket emerged around 1859 and was well established as lounging or morning wear by 1869. Light-coloured trousers increasingly indicated casual dress, as did the straw boater.

Three-piece suit with top coat

This German morning suit has matching tailored reefer jacket, trousers, and waistcoat, with an overcoat in dashing bronzed tan, a dye colour favoured in the 1870s. The materials are of superb quality and the fit is expert.

EXOTIC LEISUREWEAR

While formal wear was understated, men could express themselves with more individuality and colour when off duty. They took the opportunity to show off materials and garments imported from abroad or gathered on travels, whether out and about or indoors.

Padded dressing gowns were ideal for the businessman relaxing at home, worn over shirt and suit trousers or (right) a pair of matching pyjamas called jama trousers. This striped dressing gown was woven in India and features an Indian boteh (pinecone) motif repeat. A smoking cap with tassel and slip-on leather slippers complete the exotic ensemble.

American dressing gown and smoking cap, c.1845–50

Lounge suit jacket This jacket is worn with a tie cravat, velvet waistcoat, and light-coloured trousers. The jacket edges are turned and stitched; earlier jacket edges were left raw with firmly woven and milled cloth.