

Hat had to be worn on one side

Stand-up collar

Belt with metal buckle

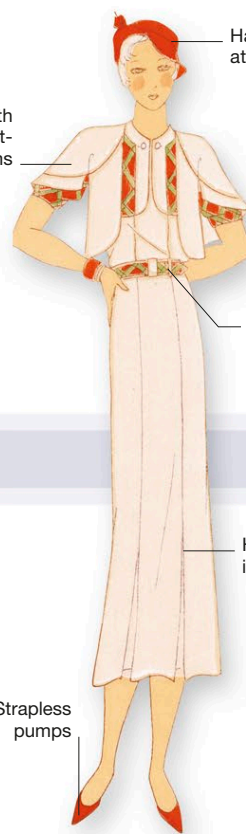

Neat cloche hat

White cuffs with notch

Slightly flaring skirt slims hips

Bolero with crescent-shaped seams

Tartan belt

Hidden inverted pleat

Strapless pumps

Lace yoke extends with sleeves

Skirt falls in folds

1932

Sharp angles This modern take on the trenchcoat is provided with feminine touches such as metal buttons, ornamental cuffs, and contrasting lapel facings in blue leather.

Sober elegance The white facing of the lapels, pockets, and cuffs emphasize the diagonal lines and jagged edges that so often appeared in women's clothing in this decade.

Tartan Two vertical seams highlight the long lines of this dress of white wool jersey. Green and black écosais (Scottish) fabric was used for the yoke, puff sleeves, and belt.

Satin and lace The crêpe satin of this gown is draped at the waist to form a belt that turns into a small basque (skirt) on one side. Buttons above the bust and on the hips emphasize the asymmetric cut.

SHOES

The 1930s saw a range of shoe and heel shapes to choose from, particularly towards the end of the decade. Bar shoes were gradually replaced with strapless opera pumps for everyday wear. "Sandals" (pumps with one or more straps) nevertheless continued to be worn in the summer and for dancing. Piping in a contrasting colour or metallic leather was often used for decoration. Shoes with higher vamps, referred to as "slip-ons" or "step-ins", and lace-up styles, usually called Oxfords, were practical daytime choices. Wedge heels and open-toe styles heralded the 1940s.

Button fastening

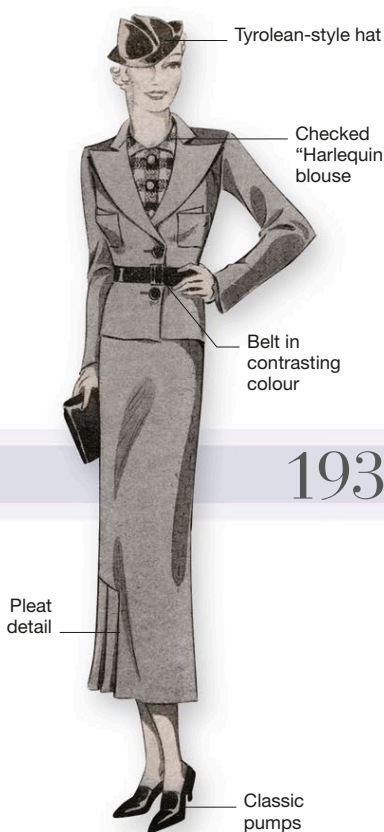

Bar shoe

Leather bar shoe

Woven leather

Early 1930s sandal

Pleat detail

Belt in contrasting colour

Classic pumps

1936

Versatility This suit could be made with plain or fur lapels and worn with or without its cape and waistcoat. The blouse was worn untucked at the waist to keep the hips looking slim.

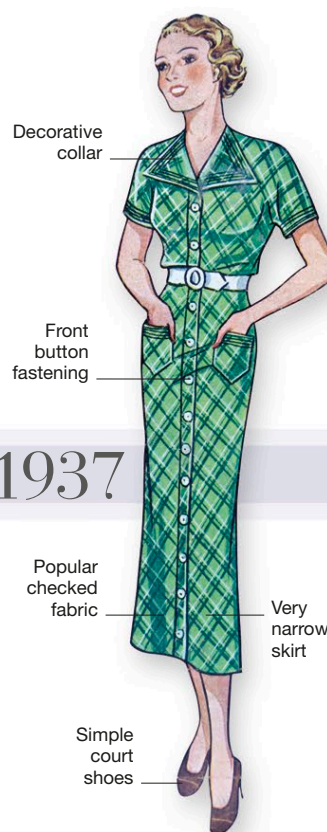

Matching blue hat

Cowl neck

Flared peplum

Mid-calf-length narrow skirt

Smart suit Gracing the front page of Spanish magazine Moda Practica, the jacket of this smart navy suit has a full peplum, which flares over the hips to contrast with the slim line of the skirt.

Decorative collar

Front button fastening

Popular checked fabric

Very narrow skirt

Simple court shoes

1937

Shirt dress In the 1930s many women still made their own clothes at home. The pattern for this simple, practical shirt dress came with a copy of Woman's Own magazine.