

< SLEEVE BUTTONS

Two or three buttons continued to be placed at the bottom of the coat sleeves, although they no longer served a function.

< BELT AND BRACES

The waist could be adjusted by buckled straps at the back. Additionally, braces were worn to ensure the trousers stayed in place.

< FRONT PLEATS

The front of the trousers is set into two pleats on each side – here tucked neatly underneath the waistcoat – to create fullness.

< BUCKLED STRAP

Plus fours had to sit tightly around the knees to achieve the desired effect. Knitted "cuffs" were considered more comfortable than the closure seen here.

Central pleats, front and back

Unlined tweed cut into loose, full shape

Knee socks

< WAISTCOAT

The front of the waistcoat is made of tweed; the back from the same brown silk that lines the jacket. The waistcoat is finished at the back with a small self-belt and buckle so that the garment can be adjusted to fit.

Six buttons down the front, plus an extra buttonhole for a watch chain

Watch fob (chain or strap) fits into a small pocket