

Felt Tyrolean-style hat

Field Service cap

Canvas haversack with ground sheet attached

Water bottle in cloth carrier

Skirts hang just below knee

High-heeled pumps

"Ammo Boots" worn with short canvas gaiters

ROSIE THE RIVETER

Out of patriotism, necessity, or because new opportunities became available, a very high number of women entered the workforce during the war. In Britain all women aged between 19 and 40 had to register at their local Labour Exchange after March 1941. They were asked to choose from the women's services, civil defence, farming, or industry. At its peak, in 1943, over 80,000 women were recruited into the Women's Land Army. In the US "Rosie the Riveter", from a well-known song, became a potent symbol of the new working women who were employed as welders and riveters on air bases.

Real-life "Rosie"

Hair worn in "Victory roll"

CWAC cap

Notched lapel

Canvas shoulder bag with leather strap

Skirt hangs 40 cm (16 in) off the ground

Brown stockings

White shirt and tie

Brass buttons

Stripes and "curls"

Sari replaces skirt

Soldier's sweetheart The man is in his British Army combat uniform (P-37 or pattern 37). The pattern was based on ski wear of the time. His girlfriend's coat has fashionably wide shoulders and a swing skirt. She wears a small-brimmed hat – hats did not require coupons.

Army corps The uniform of the Canadian Women's Army Corps (CWAC) consisted of a drab-coloured barathea (fine wool) jacket and skirt worn with a khaki drill shirt, brown necktie, and canvas bag.

WRINS The Women's Royal Indian Naval Service based its uniform on that of the WRENS, their British equivalent. However, instead of a skirt, they wore a sari with a slightly longer jacket, white shirt, and tie.