

“

Fashion is not frivolous. It is part of being alive today.

MARY QUANT, FASHION DESIGNER, 1960s

”

1953–54	1955–56	1957–58	1959–60	1961–62	1963
1953 Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II, and London couturiers including John Cavanagh, Victor Stiebel, and Mattli make ballgowns for guests at coronation balls and dances.	1955 Rebel Without a Cause is released, launching its star, James Dean, as a style icon for the rising youth culture. His death a year later cements his legendary status. 	◀ Rebel Without a Cause poster	 ▲ Brunette Barbie with brocade dress and coat (available 1959–64)
1953 The Wild One is released; Marlon Brando's representation of disaffected youth popularizes blue jeans and leather jackets. 1953 Pierre Cardin shows his first collection in Paris.		1957 Jailhouse Rock, starring Elvis Presley, marks the spread of rock-and-roll style. ▼ Scene from Jailhouse Rock	▲ John F. Kennedy is sworn in while Jackie Kennedy, wearing a grey coat by Oleg Cassini teamed with a pillbox hat and fur muff, looks on 1961 John F. Kennedy becomes US president. His wife, first lady Jacqueline Kennedy, soon becomes a fashion icon.
1954 Easy-to-wash and easy-to-dry nylon twinsets advertised in British Vogue fashion magazine.	1955 Stiletto heels are popular by the mid-1950s aided by new technology. Ultra-thin, ultra-high steel heels could sustain great pressure in comparison to wooden heels.			1961 Fur coats are much sought after as they are seen as a status symbol. Campaigners in the following decades protest vigorously against the wearing of fur. ◀ Full-length fur coat with shawl collar and wide cocoon shape	1963 The Beatles make their first national TV appearance. Their identical haircuts became a popular look among young men on both sides of the Atlantic. ▼ “Beatlemania” takes hold and the group’s look is widely copied
	1955 Mary Quant opens her influential shop, Bazaar, in London. ◀ Mary Quant's shop on the King's Road			1962 The Sidney Janis Gallery in New York exhibits works by contemporary American pop artists and the “Nouveau Réalisme” movement in a ground-breaking show called the “International Exhibition of the New Realists”.
	1956 Film star Grace Kelly marries Prince Rainier of Monaco in a religious ceremony, wearing a lace wedding dress designed by Helen Rose.	1958 The youthful Yves Saint Laurent shows his first collection at Dior – Trapeze – after Dior's death in 1957.	1959 Lycra, also known as spandex or elastane, is invented. It revolutionizes performance sportswear and then fashionable dress.		