

The minimalist British designer Phoebe Philo describes her style as “contemporary minimalism”. Whether taking her inspiration from cars, buildings, or handicrafts, Philo’s collections for French brand Céline were strong, sensible, and chic. This design is from Autumn/Winter 2011.

2011

2012

The sophisticate Serbian-born designer Roksanda Ilincic is best known for her elegant dresses. Working in silks, satins, and velvets, she often draws on the 1970s and 1980s to create polished, structured pieces, as here for pre-Autumn 2012.

The matchmaker Irish-born JW Anderson mixes a playful approach, tailoring skills, and seemingly opposing forces to great effect. This often means the juxtaposition of masculine and feminine, kinky and elegant, as here for Autumn/Winter 2012.

2015

2017

Dark materials After appearing in a fashion talent TV show, Gareth Pugh went on to launch his own label in 2006. He experiments with form and volume, often using unexpected materials such as rubber and plastic. His 2015 Autumn/Winter collection was themed around women ready for battle.

2018

Playful princess Molly Goddard’s signature look is girlish oversized dresses adorned with frills, often in pretty colours. But there is also a punk element to her designs – she layers dresses over trousers, exaggerates feminine details, and always puts her models in flat shoes or boots.

Trademark print Richard Quinn loves prints and dramatic volume, and his ability to mix them together is one of his skills. His Spring/Summer 2018 show was famously attended by Queen Elizabeth II, who gave him an award for his contribution to fashion.