

Southern dress This Provençal viscount's tunic, c.1110, follows the body, but is not fashionably skintight, though its tight sleeves had to be sewn shut at each wear. Aquitanian fashion was more sensuous than that of northern France.

Split tunic This is what French Abbot Bernard of Clairvaux meant when he complained that split clothing "revealed intimate parts". A young 12th-century Frenchman's shirt hangs over tight hose that look like naked legs.

Elegant draping This musician has used his hip belt to hitch up his tunic and create flowing lines. Sideways wrinkles show the closeness over the ribs. The wider sleeves of the outer tunic do not interfere with his playing.

Body-revealing dress This young Veronan girl's tunic is skintight – probably through lacing – and reveals all her feminine curves. The contrast with the full flaring skirt shows the new seductive fit appearing in clothing.

Noble Englishwoman This image from around 1170 shows a woman in the modest dress of married women, spinning yarn with a distaff and spindle. The veil is still long and covers all her hair. The tunic may have buttons at the front, and fits closely.

Veiled mature woman Nuns, widows, and older women left fashion behind and veiled their heads throughout the Middle Ages and Renaissance period. Wimples, which concealed the neck and chin, were pinned at the top of the head and covered with a veil.