

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

Flintlock muzzle-loaders were still common in France in the 1830s. Firing muskets produced thick, white smoke from burning gunpowder, as seen in this painting of the battle of the rue de Rohan (July 1830) in the French Revolution. At the center, a man in a top hat is priming his lock.

